ATTENTION

Over the past couple of weeks it has begun to appear that there is some misunderstanding as to what this publication is all about. Therefore read carefully:

Some people have said that we are trying to change some peoples attitudes toward certain things. Wrong. This paper is only another method of expressing opinions. If you agree with what's being said, fine. If you don't, that's fine as well. It would be totally hypocritical to attempt to force our ideas on other people.

Anyone that wants to put an opinion in this paper can do so, as long as everyone concerned agrees with what is being said. And while I'm on that subject, to all you people who said you had something to contribute, but were either too unmotivated to do it or just forgot all about it, we have this to say:

"Intelligence is ignorance
if you think and never do Your opinion is wasted
if it's only known by you"
Y.Y.Y.

Where do all the punks go? Whenever there is a worthwhile band playing anywhere, there always seem to be all these punks crawling out of the wood work. Yet, these events are usually few and far between Hey I hear that all punks are faggots.

The preceding statement is one of the more common

How often is it that you can go out somewhere and not be subject to some sort of verbal harrasement or physical harrasement, usually inflicted by some asshole just for the way you dress. Is the way punks look such a threat to peoples masculinity that they think they must prove to themselves or others that they are really the bigger man. What kind of accomplishment is it to go home with the sttisfaction of knowing that you had kicked someones head in because they were a threat to your macho image. (Face it, nothing is achieved by-proving-to-yourself by mindless violence like this, If people are so insecure of themselves that they must always seem bigger or better than the next person)

The message here is not to let)

i have nothing to say

I'm sure it boils down to the fact that people ~~are~~ are so insecure with-themselves that they are either scared or jealous when they see some one with guts to different than everyone else.

How often is it that you can go out somewhere and not be subject to some sort of verbal or physical harrasment just for the way you dress. Is the way punks dress such a threat to these insecure people that they feel they have to react in such a way that will make them seem like the bigger man. Face it, it proves nothing when all it proves when ^{people} act like this is that they are so insecure with their pitiful, plastic lives that something new or different

All it proves when people act like that

LETS FACE IT, A CRASS IMITATION BAND IS JUST AS MINDLESS AS A PISTOLS IMITATION BAND. LETS JUST HOPE THAT THE LACK OF MEANINGFUL STATEMENTS FROM LOCAL BANDS ISNT JUST AN INDICATION OF IGNORANCE AND AN ADMISSION OF A LACK OF UNDERSTANDING OF WHAT THE WHOLE MOVEMENT IS ABOUT. ITS NOT ABOUT ANARCHY SYMBOLS EITHER.

A GREAT MANY PEOPLE FEEL THAT THE LOCAL SCENE IS DEAD. WHATS HUMOUROUS ABOUT THE WHOLE "TORONTO SCENE" IS THAT WHAT MAKES THE SCENE DEAD IS THE ABSCENCE OF ANY GOOD BANDS FROM ENGLAND COMING HERE TO PLAY. THAT IS TO LAUGH.

I'D NO MORE CHANGE MY APPEARANCE THAN A BLACK MAN WOULD BECOME WHITE IF HE COULD. I AM NOT ASHAMED OF WHAT I AM.

IT WOULD BE INTERESTING TO HEAR A TORONTO BAND WITH SOMETHING TO SAY. I DONT BUY THAT BULLSHIT THAT WE HAVE IT TOO GOOD HERE EITHER. THE FACT THAT OUR PROBLEMS MAY DIFFER FROM THOSE OF THE ENGLISH DOES NOT MEAN WE HAVE NONE OF OUR OWN.

THIS ARTICLE MAY DRAW A DELUGE OF CRITICISM BECAUSE OF SONGS BY LOCALS WHICH THEY CONSIDER PROFOUND. LETS FACE IT AGAIN, THERE IS EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE. (THIS IS NOT TO SAY THAT THEIR PROFOUND SONG NECESSARILY IS) BUT THE GENERAL INTENT OF THIS ARTICLE IS ACCURATE.

then jumped into politics. And so began the dizzying ascent to prominence that now invites observers to speculate on the possibility of Rae's becoming the next leader of a party still struggling to become a major force in national politics.

EVERY so often, a new MP is labelled by his associates in the House of Commons as someone whose career will influence the life of his party and his country. His questions and interventions in Commons debates are observed with special attention. His demeanour and personality are scrutinized for the intangibles that can mould raw talent into the makings of leadership. The media wrap their clichés around him, describing him as a "comer," a "rising star."

Jean Marchand and Gérard Pelletier received this treatment after they arrived in Ottawa in 1965. To a lesser extent, so did Pierre Trudeau, whose style and anti-nationalist views were thought in the mid-1960s to be insuperable obstacles to a brilliant national career. Lawrence, Ron Atkey, and Donald all underwent a similar revival of interest after their election.

tinguished family, his evident intelligence, and his swiftly established record for political success have designated Rae as the federal New Democrat of whom much is expected.

"I don't think of myself as the heir apparent," he says. "Most of the unhappy people I know are those who fix themselves a certain goal and then are shattered if they don't make it. Broadbent is the party leader. The caucus and party are solidly behind him. He'll be the leader for as long as he wants it. Talking about the leadership is an abstract question."

Such a dismissal of leadership aspirations by someone in Rae's position is both conventional and appropriate. For Broadbent has emerged in the 1974 and 1980 campaigns as an attractive leader whose popularity goes beyond that of his predecessors.

I feel a need to speak out against some of the political literature which I have been reading. Much of it is written in 'artsy' pseudo-intellectual formats that seem to be a showcase for the authors talking down to a person, and expressing yourself clearly. The use of big words may look impressive but it's not an indication of big ideas. The whole point of expressing an opinion or an idea is that it's understood by others, if no one can understand it then there is no point. It's fruitless to argue that people who can't understand something the way it's written won't understand the ideas. Many intelligent people are not particularly articulate.

appeal to a handful of well-established MPs. The average age of the party's MPs fell from forty-eight in 1974 to forty-two in 1980.

But most of the new crop represent ridings in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, where the party made important gains in the last two elections. Of the group, only Rae, Neil Young, and Ian Deans are from Ontario, where the future of the NDP as a national force will be determined. Geography, therefore, coupled with his past, his dis-on Broadbent. The NDP representatives now ask themselves whether they erred in selecting him at their 1976 leadership convention, scarcely anyone in the NDP questions the wisdom of selecting Broadbent as NDP leader in 1975.

The NDP has also established the civilized tradition of not devouring its leaders. As a third party in federal politics, the NDP counts its blessings and disappointments in handfuls of seats or marginal shifts in the popular vote. Guided by more modest expectations than either the Liberals or Conservatives, the New Democrats do not demand high standards of electoral success from their leaders. That part of the NDP psyche that considers the party a movement for social and economic reform believes that electoral success is only one yardstick by which a leader should be measured. Even if Rae were flush with ambitions of leadership, he would have no alternative but to wait until Broadbent is ready to leave. That day still seems some distance away.

The last two elections, however, were baffling and frustrating for the NDP. In both, the governing party — Liberals in 1979, Conservatives in 1980 — was unpopular, yet the NDP, despite well-organized campaigns, did only marginally from its position. With support party grows...

lost ground in Ontario. By the 1980s as less of a national party than it had been at the beginning of the 1970s. Twenty-seven of its thirty-two MPs represent ridings in three of the western provinces. The other five MPs, including Rae, come from Ontario.

This failure to break through in Ontario — the party's popular vote in the province hovered around twenty-one per cent in the three elections of the 1970s, although the number of MPs fell — is the NDP's next obstacle to becoming a strong national party. Many of the country's most powerful unions — steelworkers, auto workers, chemical workers — are concentrated in Ontario. The party's platform, emphasizing industrial redevelopment, low energy prices, and increased Canadian ownership of the economy, has been designed with Ontario in mind. Broadbent represents the industrial riding of Oshawa. And yet in those areas where the NDP has concentrated its efforts — Toronto,
